

Jennifer Magerer – Communications and Logistics Committee Leader

Impressed and inspired by Luke's Wings mission, Jennifer Magerer, a native of Maryland, began volunteering in 2009 immediately after hearing about the organization. She has been a volunteer with the Communications and Logistics Committee in addition to providing practical needs to the wounded at Walter Reed Army Medical Center. She believes it should be every civilian's duty to assist in the healing process of every injured soldier who has risked their own well-being for the safety of another, whether donating time, money or resources. The exposure to military installations through her profession as a background investigator contracted to the federal government has shown her the great need for family and friendship in the lives of our service men and women, especially the injured. She feels honored to be a part of Luke's Wings and values the organization's commitment to excellence.
